

In one of TVA's greenhouses. It is here that scientists test the efficiency of new fertilizer compounds. It is only when the greenhouse scientists definitely approve the efficiency of a new fertilizer that it goes in for large-scale production. The degree of response shown by plants in the greenhouse indicates if the new product is promising or not. A new compound may take years to evolve and may make many journey from the laboratory to the greenhouse and back.